Alzheimer's is the most common cause of dementia which is a term used for memory loss and other cognitive abilities that interfere with daily living.

Worldwide, there are more than 55 million people living with Alzheimer's or another dementia. In America more than 6 million people battle with this disease. The majority of those affected by this disease are over the age of 65. It is estimated that by 2050, the number affected by Alzheimer's will increase to nearly 13 million.

Alzheimer's has no cure, but there are some treatments and therapy that can temporarily slow the worsening of dementia symptoms and improve quality of life. Alzheimer's changes typically begin in the part of the brain that affects learning. As it advances through the brain it leads to increasingly severe symptoms, including disorientation, mood and behavior changes; deepening confusion about events, time and place; unbounded suspicions about family, friends and professional caregivers.

People with memory loss or other signs of Alzheimer's may find it hard to recognize they have a problem. Signs of dementia may be more obvious to family and friends. Anyone experiencing dementia-like symptoms should see a doctor as soon as possible. The Alzheimer's Association is a trusted resource for reliable information, education, referral and support. You can call the hotline 24/7 at 1-800-272-3900 or visit www.myvolusia.us/alz for more info.
